What is SEMAX?

Semax is an experimental drug, originally developed in Russia for the prevention and treatment of circulatory disorders. It has also been identified as a "neurological drug" or "cognitive enhancer".

It is also known as heptapeptide Semax (MEHFPGP) and is an analogue of ACTH. It is known to exhibit prolonged neuropathic activity.

Historically, it has been used in patients experiencing disorders associated with cerebral circulatory dysfunction. It has also been suggested in the literature that this is due to its action on carboxypeptidase, which may increase physical performance and adaptations due to exposure to high intensity and high doses of exercise.

It is a synthetic peptide drug developed from the molecular structure of adrenocorticotrophic hormone (ACTH). Back in Russia, Semax was also initially used to treat stroke and brain injury. The drug has also been reported to have interesting effects on animal models, reducing stress and enhancing memory.

How does SEMAX work?

The synthetic form of adrenocorticotrophic hormone is delivered to the body via the Similac nasal spray. It works in the same way as normal human hormones to counteract stress caused by external factors in the environment.

To give you an idea, adrenocorticotrophic hormone is a hormone secreted by the pituitary gland which stimulates the release of cortisol from the adrenal glands. It regulates glucose metabolism and maintains blood pressure.

It also fuels brain action and reduces behaviours such as procrastination and avoidance. Semax also induces a controlled state of mental stress, which optimises brain function.
